She calls it repair.

Dr. Geeta Grewal did not come to aesthetic medicine the usual way. She came from surgical oncology at Indraprastha Apollo in Delhi, where the work was rebuilding facial and structural tissue after radical cancer resections. She learned the face from its deep layers out: the planes, the bone, the vessels a surgeon has to stay clear of.

Her patients moved her. As minimally invasive procedures caught on, oncology patients and their families asked whether she would do fillers and botulinum toxin. She said yes and brought the hospital with her. To its safety and its standards she added what a hospital rarely gives anyone, privacy and the care of luxury hospitality.

DR. GEETA GREWAL, FOUNDER & CMD, 9 MUSES WELLNESS.

9 Muses Wellness opened in late 2019, right before COVID. Lockdowns followed, and in 2022 a fire in the building. The move to Golf Course Road, she says, was the biggest catalyst for growth they have had.

The word she keeps coming back to is repair. She looks for the parts of a face that have aged faster than the rest and brings them back into line. She teaches younger doctors to diagnose first, the way they would for a diabetic.

Her answers follow in full from page ten.

"Every face has a beauty hidden in it."

Dr. Geeta Grewal

The face, learned from the inside.

Dr. Geeta Grewal trained as a surgical oncologist. The clinic she runs now on Golf Course Road still works like an operating theatre with better chairs.

The training happened in theatre. At Indraprastha Apollo in Delhi, Dr. Geeta Grewal worked in surgical oncology, and the cases were not small ones: radical cancer resections, after which the facial and structural tissue had to be built back. The work went deep. She learned the face plane by plane, bone first, and she learned where the vessels ran because a surgeon has to.

That is not how most people arrive in aesthetics. She is blunt about the difference. A three-dimensional sense of facial planes, bone structure and vascular safety is, in her words, knowledge "you simply cannot get from superficial cosmetic training alone."

Her patients pushed her over. As minimally invasive procedures picked up, oncology patients and their families started asking whether she could do fillers and botulinum toxin. She saw a way to bring surgical rigor to non-surgical work. She also saw a gap. Hospitals had the safety and the medical standards. Luxury hospitality had the privacy and the care. She wanted to bridge the two.

9 Muses Wellness launched in late 2019, right before COVID. There were lockdowns. In 2022 there was a fire in the building. She files both under resilience and moves on. The move to Golf Course Road turned out to be, as she puts it, the biggest catalyst for growth.

Knowledge that you simply cannot get from superficial cosmetic training alone.

DR. GEETA GREWAL, ON SURGICAL ONCOLOGY

Not wrinkles. Architecture.

She has little patience for the idea that the job is filling wrinkles. The job, as she describes it, is restoring structural balance and the facial architecture underneath, so that what follows is subtle and reads as natural rejuvenation.

Then there is the genome. Aging, she says, runs in a pattern. Put a mother and daughter side by side and the daughter will begin to show, in her thirties, the telltale signs of how her mother aged. Her case to patients is that repair changes the trajectory. The face does not have to go the way the pattern says. It can look pleasant to its age.

Safety is where the surgeon shows. When she injects, she watches the patient as closely as the needle: how comfortable they are, what they tell her in real time. She reads all of it as information about whether she is in a safe zone or near a risky one.

Younger doctors came to her after seeing her results, and she trains them. Her first lesson is the one any physician knows. Each diabetic, each hypertensive, has a reason for the disease. Each face has its own aesthetic diagnosis. Find it, then plan.

01 · DIAGNOSE

"Each face is unique, each patient has a unique diagnosis of aesthetic."

02 · FIND THE WEAK ZONES

Certain zones, she says, still look like they are in their twenties. Others have advanced. Genetics decides which go first.

03 · NAME THE PROBLEM

When zones fall out of step she calls it zonal disconnect, one of the primary causes of an unnatural result.

04 · BRING THEM IN LINE

Catch the weaker zones up to the best ones. Repair the broken ones until they blend with the healthy, with no gaps.

01 Your Journey into Aesthetic Medicine

My background isn't typical for aesthetic medicine. I started in surgical oncology at Indraprastha Apollo in Delhi, reconstructing facial and structural tissue after radical cancer resections. Operating in deep tissue layers gave me a direct, 3D understanding of facial planes, bone structure, and vascular safety—knowledge that you simply cannot get from superficial cosmetic training alone.

RESPONDING TO PATIENT DEMAND: As minimally invasive procedures picked up, oncology patients and their families began asking if I could perform fillers and botulinum toxin. I saw an opportunity to bring surgical rigor to non-surgical enhancements.

ARTISTIC FACIAL BALANCING: Non-surgical aesthetics isn't about filling wrinkles; it's about restoring structural balance and underlying facial architecture to create subtle, natural rejuvenation.

I wanted to bridge two worlds: the safety and medical standards of a hospital, and the privacy and care of luxury hospitality. We launched in late 2019, right before COVID. Navigating lockdowns and a building fire in 2022 taught us resilience. Moving to Golf Course Road turned out to be our biggest catalyst for growth.

02 Your Philosophy of Beauty and Facial Aesthetics?

03 Your Approach to Patient Care and Safe Treatments?

04 Your Work in Global Facial Anti-Aging Treatments?

PART ONE

My philosophy of beauty and facial aesthetic is maintaining the characteristic of that patient's individual face. Each face is unique. There is no second copy of that particular face, and every face has a beauty hidden in it. I approach aesthetic treatment to repair. I do repair work. I identify the weak zones on the face or the broken zones as we age. The aging occurs in a pattern that runs in our genome. It's a genetic pattern of aging. Mother, daughter, duo, if you see, the daughter will start the telltale signs of how the mother has aged in her thirties. So I tell them that if you repair, you will change the trajectory of your aging pattern and you will not look in a certain way, rather you will look pleasant to that age. So my aim is not to amplify anything, but my aim is to repair the aging damage that has happened on the face. And that's how I try to restore the beauty because every face has different zones and certain zones as per their genetic makeup of the individual age way faster compared to other zones. So I try and repair those.

"My aim is not to amplify anything."

DEMO

02–04 Natural, safe, in sync.

"Balance & Harmony is perceived as beauty."

PART TWO

Natural looking is not trying to change anything, but trying to catch up on the weaker zones to match it up to the best zones on the face and repair the broken zones and get them to blend with the healthy zones and not have gaps. What I mean by that is that certain zones on the face will still look in their twenties, whereas other zones might have advanced due to aging. And I want all of them to be blending and to be in a particular age zone, not in different zones on an individual face.

One of the primary causes of an unnatural aesthetic result is zonal disconnect, my goal is to get zones in sync with each other, this gives balance to face. Balance & Harmony is perceived as beauty.

I educate my patients with above insights, they trust my knowledge beautiful results after treatment reinforces that trust further.

DEMO

"When I do injections, I am fully aligned with my patient's real-time feedback, I completely monitor how comfortable they are during the procedure. That helps me get insight into being in a safe zone or into any risky areas, so that helps me to deliver results with safety"

DR. GEETA GREWAL · FROM HER ANSWER

05 Building Expertise and Training Other Practitioners

Practitioners, young doctors approached me to get trained with seeing the results that I was delivering, and that's how they just reached out and I was willing to train them impart with my insights and my knowledge.

SKILL, I think delivering results with complete safety, that skill they must have and overcome the fears that they have for any complications.

VALUES, I believe we are not in vanity business, we are in repair, we are doctors, we are healers, and we should align with the values of healers and care.

AND PRACTICAL LESSONS are learn to diagnose as any medical practice. Diagnosis is a key to a successful result. Learn aesthetic diagnosis and how to reach that diagnosis and design treatment accordingly because each face is unique, each patient has a unique diagnosis of aesthetic. Like each diabetic or a hypertensive has a unique reason of the disease, so identify the reason, identify the diagnosis and plan accordingly. That's most essential

06 The Story Behind 9M Skincare

"If the skin is well-hydrated ... it's fully equipped to take care of itself."

After procedures, the skin tends to need more hydration, and though there were many post-procedure creams available, every time after the procedure, patients used to give a callback that they're having issues. So, I understood that the hydration level is not optimum, that I need to have a moisturizer and a soothing ingredient that helps the skin in better recovery.

So, I started doing research on getting a product that hits the bullseye and the patient doesn't get in trouble on the next day. That's how we came up with the day and night moisture surge and the ultra-hydrating soothing gel so that the inflammation and the dehydration in the skin can be taken care of.

My core belief in skincare is a best hydration or moisturizer. If the skin is well-hydrated, it can, it's fully equipped to take care of itself. So, most of the products are designed around that.

07 Professional Recognition, Media Features, and Your Impact

Validation from the media houses and public validation kind of helps in strengthening your belief in yourself. I think that's how probably it would have helped me. And aesthetic medicine, I think should come out of vanity and it should be seen as a repair, repair before the disease hits you. And skin care choices and beauty choices should be without any guilt because I feel self-care is the antidote to depression and anxiety. People need to be responsible towards themselves because you are the most essential person in your own world. So, self-care comes starts with your skin care, with your care for yourself, and that is how I think it should be

08 Your Vision for the Future of Aesthetic Medicine

My ambition for 9M Clinics and 9M Skin Care would be to serve more and more people better and in best possible capacity and make the work more affordable, deliver more results in less spent, share my knowledge with the upcoming doctors, educate them about the field, future advances. I would be looking forward to latest things in pigmentation and hair care. And I want to build people's trust in the field, see it more as a repair, not as vanity. I've seen patients going in a guilt trip on self-care, especially in India. I want them to understand self-care is the most essential, especially in today's times
